INTRODUCTION:

It was April 15, 1991 - an important day when a revolutionary step was taken by Ms. Shamim Bilgrami. This was the setting up of a school in Nusrat Bhutto colony, an under-privileged area near T-Block of North Nazimabad in Karachi. This was, in fact, the transformation of Ms. Bilgrami's dream, the dream of spreading the light of education. She had gathered and inspired six small children of the community, spreading a rug and asking them to sit. A small black board was placed along the wall and the business of teaching commenced with great enthusiasm. Maan Jee thanks God for fulfilling all her dreams and desires. She says she owes a great debt to the Almighty and wishes to pay it back by illuminating the lives of the poor people by giving them access to education. In Maan Jee's opinion, it is the backing and encouragement given to the privileged class that is leading our nation to backwardness. "If we dream of a bright future and of earning respect among nations," she says, "we must educate our children through a uniform educational system. All the children must be given common opportunities, education must be compulsory for all and provided by learned and devoted teachers. In addition, educational institutions must have a congenial environment, a purposeful curriculum and must offer a variety of co-curricular activities." "After all, what is our purpose?" she asks and answers the questions by saying that what we seek to ingrain in our children is endurance, a sense of responsibility, love for the country and humanity, and a will to do something great.

VISION AND MISSION:

The objectives of these schools are:

- ❖ To provide education that "fosters an open mind, teaches respect and tolerance for diversity and develops a sense of civic responsibility".
- ❖ To provide employment opportunities to young girls from the communities, who are educated to the Intermediate or Bachelor level, by training them to become teachers.
- ❖ To use these schools as "civic centers" by organizing monthly meetings of the mothers of the students to discuss community and personal issues.
